

Robin

If on a frosty morning, the robin redbreast calls, His waistcoat red and burning, like a beggar at your walls,

Throw breadcrumbs on the grass for him, when the ground is hard and still,

For in his breast there is a flame, that winter cannot kill.

Iain Crichton Smith

